

The background of the cover is a fluorescence microscopy image showing a dense population of cells. The cells are stained with two different dyes: one in red and one in green. The red staining appears to outline the cell membranes or specific organelles, while the green staining is more diffuse, possibly representing nuclei or another cellular component. The overall image has a dark, almost black background, making the red and green signals stand out prominently.

THE JOURNAL OF EXPERIMENTAL MEDICINE

VOLUME 213 NUMBER 8 JULY 25, 2016 www.jem.org

EMBRYONIC ORIGINS OF AIRE-EXPRESSING CELLS
Ezh2 Loss and Myelofibrosis
Insulin Signaling in Alzheimer's Disease